

What mighty quarrels rise from trivial things! So wrote Mr. Alexander Pope, whom Nicholas Wogan remembers as a bookish boy in the little Catholic colony of Windsor Forest. The line might serve as a motto for the story which Mr. Wogan (now a one-armed retired colonel of Dillons Irish Brigade in French Service) is about to tell. The beginnings of our whole mischancy business were trivial in themselves, and in all appearance unrelated to the future. They were nothing more important than the purchase of a couple of small strong-boxes and the placing of Parson Kellys patrimony in Mr. Laws company of the West. Both of these events happened upon the same day. It was early in February of the year 1719, and the streets of Paris were deep in snow. Wogan, then plotting for King Jamess cause, rode into Paris from St. Omer at ten oclock of the forenoon, and just about the same hour Parson Kelly, plotting too in his way, drove through the Orleans gate. A few hours later the two men met in the Marais, or rather Nicholas Wogan saw the skirts of Kellys coat vanishing into an ironmongers shop, and ran in after him. Kelly was standing by the counter with a lady on either side of him, as was the dear mans wont; though their neighbourhood on this occasion was the merest accident, for the Parson knew neither of them. Sure its my little friend the lace merchant, said Wogan, and clapped his hand pretty hard on the small of his friends back, whom he had not seen for a twelvemonth and more. Kelly stumbled a trifle, maybe, and no doubt he coughed and spluttered. One of the ladies dropped her purse and shuddered into a corner. Quelle bete sauvage! murmured the second with one indignant eye upon Nicholas Wogan, and the other swimming with pity for Mr. Kelly. Madame, said Wogan, picking up the purse and restoring it with his most elegant bow, it was pure affection. No doubt, said Kelly, as he rubbed his shoulder; but, Nick, did you never hear of the bear that smashed his masters skull in the endeavour to stroke off a fly that had settled on his nose? That was pure affection too. He turned back to the counter, on which the shopman was setting out a number of small strong-boxes, and began to examine them.
